This software uses the MIDI protocol to exchange information with other programs on the same computer or others using the computer's network (Internet) where MIDI is supported (for example, in a local area network). This MIDI protocol uses all following MIDI features: The Gnu Music Information Format (Gnmidi) is the official data format of gnmidi. It is mainly intended to be used by GNU/Linux distributions, but it is also able to work on most other operating systems. This software uses the MIDI protocol to exchange information with other programs on the same computer or others using the computer's network (Internet) where MIDI is supported (for example, in a local area network). This MIDI protocol uses all following MIDI features: Files stored in the main.midi folder are called files, written in the G.midi format. The data written by Gnu Music Information Format (Gnmidi) is formatted as follows:

Two types of file are distinguished: Although gnmidi tries to be as flexible as possible, it may not support certain features depending on the hardware and operating system versions used. However, even if an application does not work with gnmidi, it may still work with another software which supports one or more of these so called 'hidden' or 'side' features. The following list contains all features used by gnmidi, except for some 'hidden' features which are not yet completely implemented in gnmidi. The following list contains all tools that work with gnmidi files:

gnmidi supports the following file formats:

As the filenames convention of Gnu Music Information Format (Gnmidi) is var_swap(filename),(durations),(change-info), the filename is completely unpredictable, even when it should be considered fixed. Each track can have its own playlist file in addition to melody file.
